IDENTIFYING A SPEAKER FOR YOUR PROGRAM

There are several types of speakers you may want to include in your program, such as health care or mental health professionals, those personally touched by breast or ovarian cancer, and Sharsheret staff members. Speakers can participate both in-person and virtually, and Sharsheret can help you secure and train a speaker.

1. Think about your own community resources.
Reach out to health care or mental health professionals in your own community to present about their areas of expertise (e.g., OBGYN, oncologist, genetic counselor, chaplain, psychologist, or radiologist). You’ll want to include people who have important content to share, would be great speakers, and could attract a crowd.

2. We can train you.
Sharsheret can provide personalized trainings for individuals in your community to speak about their experiences, their expertise, and about Sharsheret.

3. Request a Sharsheret volunteer.
Sharsheret has trained peer supporters and volunteers all across the country who share their personal stories and represent Sharsheret. Ask us if we can find someone to join you.

4. Call Sharsheret to discuss and find the right keynote speaker, expert panelist, or workshop leader for your event or staff training.
Our speakers inspire audiences across the country and speak on a variety of topics (p. 12). Speaker fees and travel costs may apply for in-person programs.
